the 1990s, the number of people aged 65 and over in the UK has increased from 10.5 million to 13.5 million (19.5% of the population).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of older people, and the Government has set out a strategy for the 21st century in the White Paper on Ageing Better (Department of Health 1999). This paper sets out the Government's strategy for meeting the needs of older people in the 21st century.

The White Paper on Ageing Better sets out a number of key objectives for the 21st century, including: to ensure that older people are able to live independently and actively; to ensure that older people are able to access the services they need; to ensure that older people are able to participate in society; and to ensure that older people are able to live in dignity and respect.

The White Paper on Ageing Better also sets out a number of key actions to be taken to meet these objectives, including: to improve the quality of care for older people; to increase the number of care workers; to improve the training of care workers; to improve the support for carers; and to improve the support for older people living in their own homes.

The White Paper on Ageing Better also sets out a number of key actions to be taken to improve the quality of care for older people, including: to improve the quality of care in care homes; to improve the quality of care in residential care; to improve the quality of care in nursing homes; and to improve the quality of care in hospices.

The White Paper on Ageing Better also sets out a number of key actions to be taken to increase the number of care workers, including: to increase the number of care workers in care homes; to increase the number of care workers in residential care; to increase the number of care workers in nursing homes; and to increase the number of care workers in hospices.

The White Paper on Ageing Better also sets out a number of key actions to be taken to improve the training of care workers, including: to improve the training of care workers in care homes; to improve the training of care workers in residential care; to improve the training of care workers in nursing homes; and to improve the training of care workers in hospices.

The White Paper on Ageing Better also sets out a number of key actions to be taken to improve the support for carers, including: to improve the support for carers in care homes; to improve the support for carers in residential care; to improve the support for carers in nursing homes; and to improve the support for carers in hospices.

The White Paper on Ageing Better also sets out a number of key actions to be taken to improve the support for older people living in their own homes, including: to improve the support for older people living in their own homes in care homes; to improve the support for older people living in their own homes in residential care; to improve the support for older people living in their own homes in nursing homes; and to improve the support for older people living in their own homes in hospices.
