the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased from 10.5 million to 13.5 million, and the number of people aged 75 and over has increased from 4.5 million to 6.5 million (Office for National Statistics 2000).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of older people, and the UK Government has set out a strategy for the 21st century in the White Paper on Ageing Better (Department of Health 1999).

The White Paper sets out a vision of a society in which older people are able to live well, and to contribute to society. It identifies a number of key areas for action, including: improving the health and care of older people; supporting older people to live independently; and promoting the social and economic participation of older people.

The White Paper also identifies a number of key challenges, including: the need to improve the health and care of older people; the need to support older people to live independently; and the need to promote the social and economic participation of older people.

The White Paper also identifies a number of key opportunities, including: the need to improve the health and care of older people; the need to support older people to live independently; and the need to promote the social and economic participation of older people.
